School culture is at the heart of school success. Power dynamics can either make or break that culture. Recognizing the debilitating role that power struggles can play in a school is essential as is the school leader's ability to increase their team's capacity to avoid power struggles.

This full day experience is geared toward helping school leaders identify how power struggles are manifested in a school and lead the learning to eliminate them through effective professional learning for school staff and deliberate growth activities with students.

Part one of the day is facilitated by author and speaker, Janice Case.
Part two of the day is an "edcamp" style experience designed so participants lead their learning.

Who should attend: Assistant Principals (P-12) from around the state who aspire to take on the issue of power struggles and lead the way in improving their schools' culture.
Other administrators welcome, of course.
